

Instructor: Date:

Learner: Regional Branch:

Program: Center:

CONTENT

- Let's Start! • Let's Explore! • Let's Practice! • Extension Activity • Target Words • Learning Points

Let's Start!

Let's try to find some common ground!

Learning Outcome

Describe necessity, duty, advice, or strong disapproval in written and spoken situations according to work and social contexts.

Ask your partner:

- Do you think it is possible to avoid disputes between people? Why or why not?
- What situations are more likely to lead to disputes?

Can Do Statements

- I can talk about beliefs, and opinions, and express annoyance.
- I can report details, reasons, or results of events or actions.
- I can talk about past habits.

Let's Explore!

In his speech, Hank Josephson talks about how to resolve* interpersonal* disputes.

* To "resolve" means to find a solution for something. Other words are to settle a dispute or to solve a problem.

 "Interpersonal" means between two or more people.

Instructions: Read the text aloud.

Good evening, ladies and gentlemen. I know it's getting late, so I'll keep my remarks brief. My name is Hank Josephson. Can you guess what I'm going to talk about? I would like to talk to you about how to resolve interpersonal disputes. If you are like me, you may feel shame after getting into a dispute with a colleague, friend, or even a loved one. I used to be a counselor. I would hear all sorts of people blame themselves for expressing things in the wrong way, or feel guilty about having a certain point of view. I was always telling people that disputes are a natural part of human nature.

I'm married to a wonderful woman, but we've had our share of arguments. Anger is not a desirable feeling, but it can be a useful one, because it shows that the topic of conversation is important to you and that it may be an urgent matter.

First, let's understand anger. Anger can be defined as a temporary loss of power. I suspect it arises when someone challenges your role or authority to take a course of action. The emotional side of your brain has taken over. Sound familiar? Do you remember what you have to do? It is difficult, but in my view, very important that you kick-start your rational brain. You want to say: "I can't believe it!" Or, "Why does this always happen?" What you need to say is: "Let's talk about this calmly for a minute." You need to analyze the situation from a new angle, because there is a part of reality that your brain has been missing: the other person's point of view. By listening to the other person, you can sometimes find a very beautiful thing. Do you know what I am talking about? It's called common ground.

Let's Practice!

Arnold talks about his past habits.

Instructions: Select the option that best completes each sentence.

- 1) I _____ to be a counselor.
 - a) use
 - b) used
 - c) will use
- 2) I _____ hear all sorts of people blame themselves for expressing things in the wrong way, or feel guilty about having a certain point of view.
 - a) was always
 - b) used
 - c) would
- 3) I _____ telling people that disputes are a natural part of human nature.
 - a) did
 - b) used
 - c) was always
- 4) There is a part of reality that your brain _____ missing: the other person's point of view.
 - a) used
 - b) did
 - c) had been
- 5) I _____ a fight out of nowhere.
 - a) would starting
 - b) would start
 - c) would starts

Let's Practice!

Can you give me the details?

Instructions: Organize the mystery sentences. Read the sentences aloud. Check your pronunciation with your instructor.

1. about? / I'm going / Can you / guess what / to talk

2. Remember / do / what / Do / ? / you / have / you / to

3. Do / am / talking / ? / what / I / you / know / about

4. resolve / talk to / interpersonal disputes. / I would / you about / like to / how to

Extension Activity

Role play a situation in which a counselor helps two people settle a dispute.

Instructions: Complete the following steps. Fill in the Self-Assessment.

- With a group of 3 people, discuss situations in which two people may be in a dispute.
- Select one situation for a role play.
- Decide who will be the counselor and who will be the two people in dispute.
- Do a role play. The people in dispute explain their point of view. The counselor tries to help them settle the dispute.
- Try to use expressions of annoyance in this lesson, such as 'for Pete's sake' or 'for heaven's sake'.
- Change roles so that each person acts as counselor one time.
- After the role play, discuss the techniques for settling the dispute that were used in the role play. Are they effective techniques?

Self-Assessment

Yes

No

I discuss situations leading people to disputes.

☐ ☐

I explain my point of view in a dispute.

☐ ☐

I express annoyance using appropriate expressions.

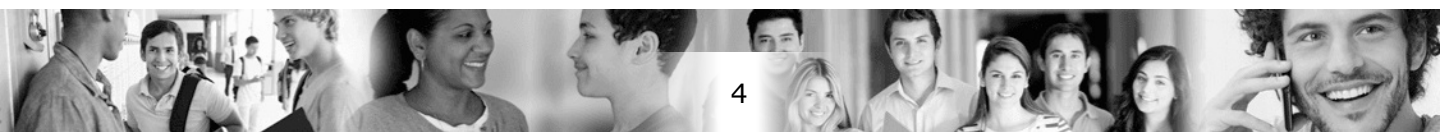

☐ ☐

I give suggestions for settling a dispute.

☐ ☐

Target Words

- common ground (noun): area of agreement between two people or groups
e.g. By listening to the other person, you can sometimes find common ground.
- shame (noun): the feeling that you are responsible for something not being right e.g. If you are like me, you may feel shame after getting into a dispute with a colleague, friend, or even a loved one.
- married (adjective): united to live together after a wedding ceremony
e.g. I'm married to a wonderful woman.
- we've had our share (expression): get more than the usual of something bad e.g. We've had our share of arguments.
- point of view (expression): opinion
e.g. You need to analyze the situation from a new angle, because there is a part of reality that your brain had been missing: the other person's point of view.
- desirable (adjective): something you want to have
e.g. Anger is not a desirable feeling, but it can be a useful one, because it shows that the topic of conversation is important to you and that it may be an urgent matter.

Learning Points

The Wh-clause in Questions

You can use wh-words to make questions. If the verb requires a preposition, you have to pay attention to the word order in the question.

Many verbs are followed by prepositions, like listen to, learn about, depend on, and so on.

Look at how you can use these verb + prepositions in sentences.

Laura was sharing a cookie with her friend Celia.

My friends and I were preparing for our exam.

If you want to ask questions using these verbs and wh-words, notice how the word order can change.

Q: Whom (or who) was Laura sharing a cookie with?

A: With her friend Celia.

or you can say

Q: With whom was Laura sharing a cookie?

A: With her friend Celia.

Q: What were you and your friends preparing for?

A: Our exam.

or you can say

Q: For what were you and your friends preparing?

A: Our exam.

Many people think that leaving a preposition at the end of a question is not correct, but both structures are possible. It can sound more formal if you put the preposition at the beginning.

Learning Points

Talking about Past Habits

To talk about habits in the past, you can use would and used to. And to talk about habits in the present you can use will.

If you want to express annoyance in the present, you can also use will and will not.

The Past Continuous verb tense can also express annoyance, but in the past. This verb tense is also used to talk about temporary actions that happened in the past.

Similarly, you can use the Past Perfect Continuous when you want to talk about repeated actions that happened before another time in the past.

Present Habits	Past Habits
will/ will not • when you want to talk about habits and routines I will always buy jeans at the Gap. They fit me well and I like the different styles.	used to • to talk about habits or states that happened frequently in the past • these habits or states are different from the present • used with action verbs and stative verbs I used to visit my grandmother every Sunday. I used to like watching cartoons on Saturday mornings. would • used for past habits only • not used for past states • only used with action verbs I would visit my grandmother every Sunday. I used to like watching cartoons on Saturday mornings. (not I would like watching cartoons on Saturday mornings.)

Learning Points

Expressing Annoyance at a Present Habit	Expressing Annoyance at a Past Habit
will/ will not shows that you are annoyed with a habit that occurs in the present She will bring her cat over to my house even though she knows I'm allergic. My brother will not stop using that terrible cologne.	Past Continuous use the past continuous with always, constantly or forever to show that you are annoyed with a past habit My boss was always calling me by the wrong name. It really made me angry since I had been there for 10 years.
Temporary Habitual Action	Temporary Habitual Action Before Another Time in the Past
Past Continuous use with a habit that was temporary in the past David went to India for work on a two-month contract. He was eating Indian food for breakfast, lunch and dinner.	Past Perfect Continuous use with a habitual or repeated action that happened before another time in the past My friend had been spending 5 hours a day training before the marathon last weekend.

Examples:

- I used to be a counselor.*
- I would hear all sorts of people blame themselves for expressing things in the wrong way, or feel guilty about having a certain point of view.*
- I was always telling people that disputes are a natural part of human nature.*

